Nursing Home Eyes

by Todd Michael St. Pierre

Look into my window, observe synthetic flowers, swaying to a ceiling fan breeze, and a wallflower, wheelchair bound at that.

For hours I look out, I see concrete, undernourished shrubs, cars and bikes rush by and they keep me company.

Faded draperies speak for years that have fallen behind me. Suddenly a slave to nostalgia and withered memories.

Do you see the photographs on my vanity? Notice how they stare back at me with abstract smiles for the elderly.

I know they are too busy. Everyone has his own life to live. I understand!

Hey...would you look into my world? Share a thought? I know you have no time to visit.

Yes I am still here, alone, but alive.
